While participating in any exercise program there is a risk of injury. While every attempt is made to reduce the risk of accidents, sporting injuries are accepted as a fact of life to athletes of all kinds. If you do not wish to increase your risk of injury, do not participate in CrossFit or Tae Kwon Do Related Exercises.

Rhabdomyolysis: Apart from normal sporting injuries, high intensity exercise can run the risk of a condition called Rhabdomyolysis. Rhabdomyolysis is a relatively rare condition that must be recognized quickly and treated early. The name literally means striated (rhabdo) muscle (myo) disintegration (lysis). Rhabdomyolysis begins with muscle injury associated with a variety of causes. Muscle fibers break down, releasing their contents—potassium, creatine kinase, myoglobin, and urate—into the blood, where they eventually collect in and overload the kidneys. Renal failure, a potentially fatal condition, can be result. The following conditions have been implicated in the etiology of exertional rhabdomyolysis: hypokalemia, sickle-cell trait, dehydration, hangover, the use of statin drugs to control cholesterol, extreme heat or humidity, cocaine useage. Former athletes in a detrained condition seem to be at particular risk. Unlike novice athletes, they have the mental ability to force themselves to push to levels of intensity for which they may not be ready. Signs and Symptoms of Rhabdo include muscle weakness, nausea, persistent and extreme muscle soreness, discolored (tea-colored) urine. If you are displaying ANY of these symptoms after a workout, get to an emergency room immediately and ask for a creatine kinase test. Rhabdomyolysis is an uncommon condition and your physician may not be familiar with its presentation.
